OPINION OF THE COURT

Garth, Circuit Judge:

This appeal from a jury verdict was brought by defendants Advanta Corp. and its wholly owned subsidiary,

Advanta Mortgage Corp., U.S.A. (together, "Advanta"), with a cross-appeal by plaintiff Milton Riseman ("Riseman"). For the following reasons, we will affirm the District Court's September 7, 2001 judgment, except that we will reduce Riseman's damages under the Pennsylvania Wage Payment and Collection Law, 43 P.S. 260.1 et seq. (the "WPCL"), from $2,562,001 to $1,435,000. Consequently, the jury's total damage award will be reduced by $1,127,001, and the District Court's award of liquidated damages under the WPCL, which had been calculated at the higher figure, will be vacated and remanded to the District Court for recalculation based upon the new WPCL damage figure of $1,435,000.

I.

Riseman had been employed by Advanta Mortgage Corp. as a senior executive for roughly six years, during which time he was compensated by a substantial salary and various bonuses.[1] The facts of this matter are well-known to the parties and explored in detail in the record, and do not warrant re-telling here. Suffice it to say, after Riseman's employment was terminated in the latter part of 1998, Riseman brought suit in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania against Advanta and certain senior executives of Advanta—William Rosoff, Dennis Alter and Olaf Olafsson (the "Individual Defendants")—alleging, inter alia, age discrimination under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq. (the "ADEA"), retaliation under

---

[1] Riseman's starting salary in 1992 was $200,000 per year, which rose to $385,000 in 1998. In addition to salary, Advanta's practice was to award performance bonuses under Advanta's Management Incentive Program ("AMID"). These AMIP bonuses were calculated by reference to an assigned yearly "target" bonus, from which the recipient could receive a higher or lesser amount. In this action, Riseman sought his 1998 AMIP bonus, a $400,000 bonus offered in 1998 (the "1998 Retention Bonus"), and a $650,000 change of control bonus offered in 1997 (the "1997 Change of Control Bonus") under the WPCL.

the ADEA, violations of the WPCL, breach of contract, detrimental reliance, fraud and negligent misrepresentation.

On October 23, 2000, the District Court partially granted a motion for summary judgment brought by the defendants. Pursuant to the court's rulings, a number of claims no longer relevant here were dismissed, but the following claims survived against Advanta for trial: (1) age discrimination; (2) retaliation; (3) violations of the WPCL; (4) breach of contract; (5) detrimental reliance; (6) fraud; and (7) negligent misrepresentation. In addition, the following claims were to be tried against the Individual Defendants: (1) detrimental reliance; (2) fraud; and (3) negligent misrepresentation.

The jury trial of Riseman's claims was lengthy and detailed, commencing on November 14, 2000 and continuing through December 4, 2000. Pursuant to the defendants' Rule 50 motion at the close of Riseman's evidence,[2] the District Court entered judgment in favor of the Individual Defendants on all claims, and in favor of Advanta on the fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims. The remaining claims reached the jury for determination.

On December 5, 2000, the jury returned a verdict for Advanta on the age discrimination claim, but in Riseman's favor on retaliation, violations of the WPCL, breach of contract and detrimental reliance, awarding a total of $3,939,126 in damages to Riseman. The jury's award was broken down into two components: back pay under the ADEA retaliation claim for $1,377,125, and damages under the WPCL claim for $2,562,001. The jury further found that [2] Riseman contends that Advanta failed to renew its Rule 50 motion at the close of all evidence, and that, as a result, it has waived its sufficiency of the evidence arguments on appeal. Upon review of the record, however, we hold that Advanta did, in fact, renew its motion at sidebar and that the District Court informed counsel for both Riseman and Advanta that they did not need to argue their respective motions. See Joint App. at 3320. Accordingly, Advanta has not waived its sufficiency of the evidence arguments.

Advanta's violation of the ADEA was "wilful" and that there "was no good faith basis" to deny Riseman's earned wages under the WPCL.

In September 2001, the District Court rejected the parties' post-verdict motions and entered a final judgment in favor of Riseman for $6,071,783.25. This larger award reflected statutory enhancements for liquidated damages under the ADEA and the WPCL, and included prejudgment interest on Riseman's back pay award.

Advanta raises a multitude of issues on appeal. In connection with the retaliation claim, it argues that because Advanta contemplated discharging Riseman prior to the alleged protected activity (Riseman's August 17, 1998 letter, which raised allegations of age discrimination), Riseman failed to prove at trial that there was a causal connection between that activity and Riseman's termination. Advanta also contends that even if such a causal connection were shown, the jury's damage verdict is excessive and not supported by the record.

We have carefully examined the entire record; we have heard oral argument; and we have reviewed the contentions and the exhibit presented by Advanta, as well as the contentions of Riseman. We are satisfied that the jury's finding of retaliation and its award for back pay were appropriate.

As an initial matter, the jury was entitled to believe that Advanta did not decide to terminate Riseman until after the August 17, 1998 letter was received, thereby inferring a causal link between the protected activity and the termination. Indeed, on August 18, 1998—in response to Riseman's letter—Advanta's counsel wrote that "[n]otwithstanding [Riseman's] rejection of the offer, Mr. Riseman remains employed by the Company." It was only after Riseman returned to work later that day that Rosoff told Riseman to "go home." While Advanta advances different interpretations of its August 18th letter, the jury was entitled to believe that Advanta made its decision to terminate Riseman as a result of his August 17th letter.

Moreover, we reject Advanta's contention that the ADEA back pay award of $1,377,125 was excessive. In reaching that amount, the jury could have, on this record, calculated Riseman's back pay in the following manner. First, at a salary of $385,000 per year in 1998, the jury could have awarded roughly $80,000 to Riseman for the remaining two and a half months of 1998 for which he was not paid. Second, because Riseman received a 20% raise in salary from 1997 to 1998, the jury could have contemplated similar increases in 1999 and 2000, bringing his annual salary in those years to $462,000 and $554,400, respectively. Third, given those salaries, the jury could have also awarded maximum AMIP bonuses for 1999 and 2000—which, for reasons discussed below, were limited to 100% of base salary—to provide an additional $462,000 for the 1999 AMIP bonus and $554,400 for the 2000 AMIP bonus. Consequently, the jury could have concluded that Riseman would have made a total of roughly $2,112,800 at Advanta from October 1998 to December 2000.

In addition, the record shows that Riseman's new position at American Financial Business commenced in June 1999 at a rate of $335,000 until October 20, 2000, at which time he received a raise to $350,000 per year. It was also established that Riseman received his first bonus of $100,000 shortly prior to trial. Accordingly, the jury could have concluded that Riseman's mitigation of damages from October 1998 to December 2000 was roughly $600,000.

Consequently, under this one hypothetical calculation, the jury could have awarded Riseman back pay damages of approximately $2,112,800 minus mitigation of damages of $600,000, to arrive at $1,512,800—well over the $1,377,125 actually awarded by the jury in back pay. See, e.g., Scully v.

U.S. Wats. Inc., 238 F.3d 497, 515 (3d Cir. 2001) ("The law does not command mathematical preciseness from the evidence in finding damages. Instead, all that is required is that sufficient facts ... be introduced so that a court can arrive at an intelligent estimate without speculation or conjecture.") (internal quotations omitted). As the District Court noted, other hypothetical calculations could have been derived also justifying the jury's $1.3 million back pay award.

As a reviewing court, it is not our function to substitute our judgment for that of the jury. Accordingly, since we have identified a sound basis for arriving at the jury's ADEA damage award, we will affirm the jury's back pay amount of $1,377,125, as well as the District Court's award of prejudgment interest on this amount.[3] Moreover, in light of the jury's finding of a "wilful" violation of the ADEA, we will also affirm the District Court's award of liquidated damages awarded under that statute. See 29 U.S.C. § 626(b).

B.

With regard to the WPCL claim, Advanta contends that the District Court should have entered judgment as a matter of law in its favor, principally for three reasons. First, Advanta argues that all three bonuses sought by Riseman under the WPCL—the 1998 Retention Bonus, the 1997 Change of Control Bonus and the 1998 AMIP bonus—were satisfaction contracts subject to Advanta's discretion and that [3] Significantly, the jury's back pay award is justified without taking into account any recovery for the 1998 AMIP bonus amount sought by Riseman under his WPCL claim, or, for that matter, any of the other bonuses sought by Riseman under his WPCL claim. Together with the fact that the District Court instructed the jury numerous times not to award the same damages twice in calculating the ultimate damage award to Riseman, we reject Advanta's contention that there was double-counting between the jury's AREA award and its WPCL award. See, e.g., Loughman v. Consol-Pennsylvania Coal Co., 6 F.3d 88, 102 (3d Cir. 1993) ("We must assume that the jury followed the court's instructions and arrived at a verdict based on the instructions.") (internal quotations omitted).

Riseman failed to show he satisfied the conditions required by any of the bonuses. Second, Advanta asserts that the 1998 Retention Bonus and the 1998 AMIP bonus could not have been "earned" under the WPCL, and therefore are not recoverable under that statute. Third, Advanta contends that all three bonuses were gratuitous promises and are unenforceable as a matter of law. Alternatively, Advanta argues that even if the jury were entitled to award Riseman the three bonuses, it should be permitted a new trial because the $2,562,001 WPCL award is excessive and not supported in the record.

Upon careful review of the record, we conclude that the jury was entitled to believe that Riseman satisfied all of the conditions necessary to receive each of the three bonuses, and also that Advanta itself believed that Riseman satisfied all of the conditions to receive the three bonuses. Indeed, this conclusion is consistent with the jury's specific finding that Advanta "had no good faith basis" to deny Riseman the bonuses he sought under the WPCL.[4] [4] In this way, we also reject Advanta's contention that it is entitled to a new trial because the District Court erred in instructing the jury. Advanta contends that its discretion in determining whether Riseman was sufficiently flexible and cooperative to receive the 1998 Retention Bonus was subject only to a "good faith" standard rather than the more stringent "reasonableness" standard as charged by the District Court. Assuming, without deciding, that the District Court's instruction were erroneous, it is evident that the jury—in light of this record—would have found against Advanta even if Advanta's requested "good faith" instruction were given, particularly since the jury specifically concluded that Advanta lacked any "good faith" basis to withhold Riseman's bonus. In this way, such an erroneous instruction would have been harmless. See Pivirotto v. Innovative Systems, Inc., 191 F.3d 344, 357 (3d Cir. 1999) ("Although we hold that the jury instruction challenged in this case was erroneous, we can affirm the judgment in ISI's favor if that error was harmless."); Murray v. United of Omaha Life, Ins. Co., 145 F.3d 143, 156 (3d Cir. 1998) (noting that an error is harmless if "it is highly probable that the error did not contribute to the judgment") (internal quotations omitted).

Similarly, the evidence and testimony adduced at trial supports the conclusion that the 1998 Retention Bonus and the 1998 AMP bonus could have been fully earned by Riseman prior to his termination, and that Advanta legally obligated itself to pay such bonuses to Riseman by the time of his termination. See 43 P.S. §§ 260.3.(b) & 260.5(a); Weldon v. Kraft. Inc., 896 F.2d 793, 801 (3d Cir. 1990). The mere fact that certain compensation is not payable until a future date is not necessarily fatal to a WPCL claim so long as the employee is deemed to have "earned" it during his employment. See, e.g., Scully, 238 F.3d at 516 (holding that although the employee was terminated before he was able to exercise his stock options, the employee's stock options constituted "earned" compensation within the meaning of the WPCL, and the employer therefore violated the WPCL when it refused to honor employee's attempts to exercise those options).

Further, we reject Advanta's suggestion that the bonuses were unenforceable promises. With regard to the 1998 Retention Bonus and the 1997 Change of Control Bonus, there was sufficient evidence presented at trial for the jury to have concluded (which it did) that the traditional indices of a binding contract—offer, acceptance and consideration—were present. In any event, the jury was entitled to conclude (which it did) that Riseman detrimentally relied upon these bonuses. With regard to the 1998 AMIP bonus, once the jury concluded that Riseman sufficiently earned that bonus prior to his termination—which, as discussed above, the jury was entitled to do—Advanta was required to pay that bonus under the WPCL.

Notwithstanding the above, we agree with Advanta's contention that the jury's $2,562,001 WPCL award was excessive. Riseman's own testimony at trial, coupled with his expert's testimony, established that Riseman's 1998 AMIP bonus was limited to 100% of his base salary, or $385,000.[5] Because Riseman's WPCL claim consisted only of the 1998 Retention Bonus ($400,000), the 1997 Change of Control Bonus ($650,000) and the 1998 AMIP bonus (limited to $385,000), the maximum damage award the jury could have provided under the WPCL was $1,435,000. Consequently, the jury's $2,562,001 award was $1,127,001 greater than what was supported by the record.

Accordingly, we will reduce the jury's $2.562 million WPCL award to $1,435,000. Because we are persuaded by the record that the jury verdict included all three bonuses in awarding the original $2.562 million WPCL award, we reject Advanta's contention that the jury's error requires a remand for a new trial with regard to the three bonuses under the WPCL. Moreover, as discussed in note 3, supra, because there is no overlap between the WPCL and the ADEA damage awards, we also reject Advanta's contention that this error requires a new trial on the retaliation claim.[6]

[5] In fact, Riseman's own summary judgment opposition papers—which were not before the jury at trial—conceded that his AMIP bonus was limited to 100% of his base salary.

[6] Similarly, we are not persuaded by Advanta's remaining arguments. First, we need not address Advanta's contention that the jury's total damage award improperly contained front pay, because front pay was simply not awarded by this jury. The jury's $1,377,125 ADEA award, by its own terms, consisted entirely of back pay. Moreover, the WPCL award consisted only of the three bonuses discussed above, none of which can be characterized as front pay. Second, we reject Advanta's suggestion that the jury's award may have contained amounts for severance pay. All sides agree that Riseman withdrew any claim he may have had for severance payments before the issues were given to the jury. In any event, as discussed above, the jury's ADEA and WPCL awards are sustainable without reference to severance payments. Finally, we are not persuaded by Advanta's argument that the District Court's award of liquidated damages under the ADEA and the WPCL constituted a double penalty. As already discussed, the jury's awards under both claims did not overlap with one another in any way, and, therefore, the District Court's assessment of liquidated damages based upon those awards do not constitute a double penalty. Indeed, under the facts of this particular Because we will reduce the jury's WPCL award, we will also vacate the District Court's issuance of liquidated damages of $640,500.25 under the WPCL, and remand only that issue to the District Court for recalculation based upon the reduced WPCL award.

III.

A.

In his cross-appeal, Riseman argues that the District Court erroneously granted judgment as a matter of law in favor of all defendants on the fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims, contending that the jury was entitled to consider whether he was improperly induced into remaining at Advanta when it promised him the 1998 Retention Bonus and the 1997 Change of Control Bonus but failed to pay them.

Upon review of the record, however, we reject Riseman's contention. While Pennsylvania law recognizes claims for fraud where the defendants' misrepresentations cause the plaintiff to refrain from acting, Smith v. Renaut, 387 Pa. Super. 299, 305 (Pa. Super. 1989), Riseman failed to present any evidence at trial that he sought employment outside of Advanta during the relevant time period, or that alternative employment was available or desirable.[7] case, the two damage awards at issue here (the ADEA award and the WPCL award) address different conduct by Advanta—one for illegal termination based upon unlawful retaliation against Riseman for protected activity, and one for simply failing to pay Riseman what he had earned at Advanta while he was employed there.

[7] Although Riseman never introduced evidence that he looked for other employment, Advanta sought to introduce testimony that Riseman may have looked for a job in California in June 1998 to undercut his detrimental reliance claims. In light of its Rule 50 ruling as to the fraud and misrepresentation claims, the District Court did not admit such evidence as it became irrelevant. In a footnote at the end of its opening brief, Advanta, asserts—without explanation—that the District Court's decision to exclude this testimony was erroneous and that it provides a ground for a new trial on all issues. As we cannot agree that the exclusion

Moreover, there is no evidence suggesting that Riseman would have left Advanta but for the promises made to him in 1997 and 1998.

Accordingly, we will affirm the District Court's judgment in favor of the defendants on the fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims.

B.

Riseman also contends that the District Court's ruling granting the Individual Defendants judgment as a matter of law with regard to the detrimental reliance claims should be reversed. However, all of the evidence presented at trial showed that the bonuses offered to Riseman by Advanta's executives were offered in their capacities as corporate officers and not in their personal capacities. Riseman points to nothing in the record to demonstrate that the Individual Defendants did anything to assume Advanta's liability personally. See, e.g., B&L Asphalt Ind. Inc. v. Fusco, 753 A.2d 264, 270 (Pa. Super. 1997) ("[I]t is a basic tenet of agency law that an individual acting as an agent for a disclosed [principal] is not personally liable on a contract between the [principal] and a third party unless the agent specifically agrees to assume liability.") (internal quotations omitted).

Accordingly, we will affirm the District Court's ruling in favor of the Individual Defendants on the detrimental reliance claim.

IV.

For the foregoing reasons, we will affirm the jury's verdict and damages for retaliation under the ADEA in the amount of $1,377,125 in back pay. We will also affirm the District Court's award of liquidated damages under the ADEA doubling the jury's back pay award. Similarly, the

of this evidence by the District Court was an abuse of discretion, we reject Advanta's argument in this regard.

District Court's award of prejudgment interest on Riseman's ADEA back pay award will be affirmed.

As to the jury's WPCL award, however, we will reduce the jury's award from $2,562,001 to $1,435,000, a reduction of $1,127,001. As a consequence and because the District Court's liquidated damages calculation was based on the higher jury verdict, we are obliged to vacate and remand to the District Court for a recalculation of the liquidated damages on the revised amount of $1,435,000. Upon completion of this task, a new judgment shall be entered by the District Court in accordance with this opinion. The remand which we order is limited only to the recalculation of liquidated damages under the WPCL.

We will also affirm the District Court's judgment in favor of all defendants on the fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims, as well as its judgment in favor of the Individual Defendants on the detrimental reliance claim.

TO THE CLERK:

Please file the foregoing opinion.

APPENDIX B

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

MILTON RISEMAN	:
v.	:	98-CV-6671
ADVANTA CORP., et al.	:

EXPLANATION AND ORDER

On December 5, 2000, a jury awarded plaintiff Milton Riseman $3,939,126 in damages against his former employer, Advanta Corporation and Advanta Mortgage Corporation, USA ("Advanta"). The jury determined that Advanta was not liable for age discrimination against Riseman, a 62 year-old executive, but that it had retaliated against him in violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. The jury also found Advanta liable for breach of contract, detrimental reliance, and violation of the Pennsylvania Wage Payment and Collection Law.

Advanta now moves for judgment as a matter of law and for a partial new trial. Riseman moves for a partial new trial on other grounds. The motions will be denied.

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

In 1992, Advanta hired Riseman from Citibank. (11/14/00 at 57-60, 68-69). In 1994, Riseman was promoted to President and CEO of Advanta Mortgage Corporation, USA ("Advanta Mortgage"). (11/14/00 at 60).[1] From 1992 to 1997, Riseman's performance was well received, and he was credited with having saved, turned around, and built the mortgage unit. (P-51-54; P-116; 11/14/00 at 105-125; 11/17/00 at 64-65; 11/20/00 at 61-63, 87-88; 11/21/00 at 47-65; 11/29/00 at 80).

[1] At the time of trial, Advanta Mortgage was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Advanta Corporation. (11/14/00 at 68; 12/1/00 at 164-67).

In April 1997, Advanta was examining strategic alternatives, including a potential sale of all or a part of its business. (11/17/00 at 66). To further the strategic initiative, Advanta offered bonus opportunities to more than 50 key management employees. (P-132; 11/17/00 at 123-24). In a letter dated April 28, 1997, Chairman Dennis Alter offered Riseman a bonus equal to 200% of his base salary. This "1997 bonus" would be paid in the event of a "change of control affecting your group." According to the letter, Alter had "sole discretion" to determine whether Riseman satisfied the bonus conditions. Below his signature, Alter Wrote: "Milt, Thanks for Being A Total Mench During This Process. D." (P-46; 11/17/00 at 64-66, 118-19).[2]

In October 1997, Advanta announced an agreement with Fleet Financial Group, pursuant to which Fleet would acquire Advanta's consumer credit card business. (P-212). When the deal closed in February 1998, Advanta Mortgage emerged as Advanta's most critical business unit, accounting for 85% of the entire corporation's revenues, assets and profits. (P-8 P-251; 11/20/00 at 6, 87-88; 11/21/00 at 47-65). Given the sudden spotlight on the mortgage unit, the "Office of the Chair" exercised closer scrutiny over Riseman and Advanta Mortgage. (11/14/00 at 126, 145-47; 11/17/00 at 138, 142; 11/27/00 at 103; 11/29/00 at 129).[3]

[2] According to Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, "mensch" means a "person of integrity and honor." (P-278). During the strategic process, Riseman had helped BT Wolfensohn to evaluate various possible transactions. (11/14/00 at 128-29).

[3] The "Office of the Chair" consisted of Advanta Chairman Dennis Alter, Vice-Chairman William Rosoff, and President Olaf Olafsson. Riseman reported to the Office of the Chair. (11/14/00 at 140, 144).

Advanta did not award Riseman the 1997 bonus. (11/17/00 at 65-66). However, Advanta did award the bonus to 54 employees who were transferred to Fleet, and at least 13 employees whose business units did not experience a change of control. (11/14/00 at 132; 11/17/00 at 120, 138-66). Dennis Alter and William Rosoff remained at Advanta and each received $5 million bonuses. (11/17/00 at 141-42; 12/1/00 at 61-65). Elizabeth Mai, who also remained at Advanta, received a $1.5 million bonus. (11/17/00 at 139; 11/28/00 at 9; 11/29/00 at 226-27).

In March 1998, Alter orally extended Riseman another bonus opportunity, the "1998 bonus." (11/14/00 at 145-51). On May 12, 1998, the verbal promise was memorialized. According to the terms of the memorandum, Riseman would receive $400,000 on March 31, 1999, subject to three conditions: (1) exercising "flexibility and cooperation," (2) keeping the arrangement "confidential," and (3) "being here at the time." The Office of the Chair would determine whether Riseman fulfilled these criteria. (P-48).

On a yearly basis, Advanta also awarded Advanta Management Incentive Program ("AMIP") bonuses to key executives, including Riseman. (11/14/00 at 149). These bonuses were for an unliquidated amount, based upon the executive's individual performance and the performance of his business unit. The AMIP bonus could be earned by, and was paid to, executives who did not remain employed for the entire year. (11/17/00 at 14-15).

On August 3, 1998, Advanta informed Riseman that he was being replaced with a 42 year-old as President and CEO, but that he could stay on as "Chairman" of Advanta Mortgage. (11/14/00 at 64-66, 159-61). Advanta promised Riseman the same salary and bonus opportunities he enjoyed as President and CEO. (11/14/00 at 161). Riseman accepted the Chairman position and was relocated to the executive suite of Advanta's corporate headquarters. (11/14/00 at 163-65; 11/16/00 at 10-15).

After three days under the new arrangement, Riseman concluded that the Chairman position was not a "real" job. (11/14/00 at 166-67; 11/16/00 at 15-16). On August 16, 1998, Riseman met with Vice-Chairman William Rosoff to voice his grievances. (11/16/00 at 19-20). On August 17, 1998, Riseman consulted Fred Blume, an attorney with Blank, Rome, Comisky & McCauley LLP. (11/15/00 at 3-6). In a letter of August 17, 1998, Riseman's attorney threatened Advanta with age-discrimination charges. (P-55; 11/15/00 at 7-8). In a letter response dated August 18, 1998, Advanta's counsel denied the charges, but promised that "Mr. Riseman remains employed by the company." (P-56; P-57; 11/15/00 at 9-12). On that same day, Rosoff told Riseman to "go home," and not to report to work. (11/14/00 at 66-67; 11/15/00 at 11-13).

After August 18, 1998, Riseman performed essentially no further services for Advanta. (11/16/00 at 31-32). On August 28, 1998, Advanta published an internal newsletter advising its employees that Riseman had resigned his position as Chairman. (P-58). On September 2, 1998, Riseman filed formal charges of age discrimination with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. (11/14/00 at 67). On October 23, 1998, Advanta sent Riseman a letter informing him that he was being separated from the payroll. (P-60).

There was no evidence that Riseman received any alternative offer of employment during or immediatcly following his separation from Advanta. After approximately eight months without full-time employment, Riseman accepted a new job with lower salary and inferior bonus opportunities. (11/14/00 at 63; 11/15/00 at 90). Riseman never received the 1997 bonus, the 1998 bonus, the 1998 AMIP bonus, or any severance pay from Advanta.

On December 23, 1998, Riseman filed a complaint in federal district court. Among other things, the Complaint and Amended Complaint alleged age discrimination and retaliation under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA"), 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq., breach of contract, detrimental reliance, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and violation of the Pennsylvania Wage Payment and Collection Law ("WPCL"), 43 P.S. § 260.1 et seq. After two years of acrimonious litigation, the case went to trial. From November 14, 2000 to December 4, 2000, an attentive jury evaluated the evidence supporting Riseman's claims.

At the close of plaintiffs evidence, the defendants moved for judgment as a matter of law. The motion was granted in favor of all defendants on Riseman's fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims. With respect to detrimental reliance, judgment was granted to the individual defendants, Dennis Alter, William Rosoff, and Olaf Olafsson. The motion was denied as to all other claims.

On December 5, 2000, the jury returned its verdict. The jury found Advanta liable for retaliation under the ADEA, breach of contract, detrimental reliance and violation of the WPCL, but not liable for age discrimination. In response to special interrogatories, the jury determined that the ADEA violation was "willful," and that Advanta had no "good faith" basis to withhold Riseman's wages. The jury awarded total damages of $3,939,126, including $1,377,125 in ADEA "back pay" and $2,562,001 under the WPCL. Judgment was entered accordingly on December 7, 2000.

II. Discussion

Advanta moves for judgment as a matter of law and for a new trial with respect to all claims on which the jury found against it at trial. Riseman requests a new trial for all claims on which he did not prevail. The motions will be denied.

As a preliminary matter, there is a strong argument that Advanta waived the right to renew its motion for judgment as a matter of law, or to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence in any way. Failure to move for a directed verdict at the close of all evidence forecloses the defendant from renewing a Rule 50 motion after the verdict has been rendered. See Greenleaf v. Garlock, Inc., 174 F.3d 352, 364-65 (3d Cir. 1999); Beebe v. Highland Tank & Mfg. Co., 373 F.2d 886, 888 (3d Cir. 1967). In addition, failure to move for a directed verdict at the close of all evidence "wholly waives the right to mount any post-trial attack on the sufficiency of the evidence." Yohannon v. Keene Corp., 924 F.2d 1255, 1262 (3d Cir. 1991); see also Gebhardt v. Wilson Freight Forwarding Co., 348 F.2d 129, 132 (3d Cir. 1965), Advanta moved for judgment as a matter of law after Riseman rested his case, but did not specifically renew that motion at the close of all evidence. However, there is some indication in the record that Riseman's counsel and the Court may have implicitly understood Advanta's counsel to have renewed the motion. (12/4/00 at 129-32). Therefore, I will not find that Advanta has waived its right to mount a post-trial attack. Cf. Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 183-84 (3d Cir. 1992); Keith v. Truck Stops Corp., 909 F.2d 743, 744 (3d Cir. 1990); Acosta v. Honda Motor Co., Ltd., 717 F.2d 828, 831-32 & n.3 (3d Cir. 1983).

A. ADVANTA'S MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 50, Advanta renews it motion for judgment as a matter of law. Judgment as a matter of law is appropriate only where the record is "critically deficient of that minimum quantum of evidence from which a jury might reasonably afford relief." Starceski v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 54 F.3d 1089, 1095 (3d Cir. 1995); Dunn v. Hovic, 1 F.3d 1362, 1364 (3d Cir. 1993); Limbach Co. v. Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n, AFL-CIO, 949 F.2d 1241, 1261 (3d Cir, 1991) (en banc). A court must review the record in the light most favorable to the verdict winner, resolving all conflicts in the evidence in his favor. See Williamson v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 926 F.2d 1344, 1348 (3d Cir. 1991). After giving the prevailing party the benefit of every fair and reasonable inference, the motion must be denied unless the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. See Blum v. Witco Chemical Corp., 829 F.2d 367, 372 (3d Cir. 1987); Laskaris v. Thornburgh, 733 F.2d 260, 264 (3d Cir. 1984).

(1) ADEA Retaliation

The jury found Advanta liable for retaliation under the ADEA. See 29 U.S.C. § 623(d). In its motion for judgment as a matter of law, Advanta claims that the jury could not have concluded that Advanta took any adverse employment action against Riseman after he had engaged in protected activity. Advanta insists that all adverse employment decisions were made and communicated to Riseman before he asserted an age-discrimination complaint. See Delaware State College v. Ricks, 449 U.S. 250, 258 (1980) (statute of limitations for employment discrimination accrues when decision is "made and communicated" to employee). This is incorrect. There was ample evidence for the jury to conclude that Advanta retaliated against Riseman after he asserted an age-discrimination complaint.

Advanta states that its decision to move Riseman from the position of "President and CEO" to "Chairman" was made and communicated on August 3, 1998, before Riseman engaged in protected activity. However, consistent with its finding on age discrimination, the jury could have concluded that Riseman's shift of positions within Advanta Mortgage was not the relevant retaliation. Instead, the jury could have found retaliation in Advanta's decision to terminate Riseman altogether, as well as to deny him bonuses and severance. These were not inevitable consequences of Riseman's move to the Chairman position, but independent sources of retaliation. See Ricks, 449 U.S. at 257-58 & n.9 (distinguishing between inevitable consequences of earlier action and independent forms of discrimination).

Riseman complained about age discrimination on August 17, 1998 and remained employed with Advanta as of August 18, 1998. (P-55; 11/15/00 at 6-12). At the very least, Advanta "communicated" to Riseman that he was employed as of August 18, 1998. (P-56; P57). On December 5, 2000, Advanta's counsel confirmed to the Court that Riseman remained employed as of August 18, 1998. (12/5/00 at 74-76, 80).

Thus, the jury had sufficient evidence to conclude that Advanta terminated Riseman, and/or denied him bonuses and severance, after he had engaged in protected activity on August 17, 1998. Viewing the inferences in the light most favorable to the verdict winner, the jury was well within its right to find retaliation under the ADEA. See Woodson v. Scott Paper Co., 109 F.3d 913, 920-21 (3d Cir. 1997) (evidence at trial supported causal link between complaints of discrimination and termination); Delli Santi v. CNA Ins. Co., 88 F.3d 192 (3d Cir. 1996) (evidence at trial allowed jury to find retaliation).

(2) Breach of Contract: 1998 Bonus

Advanta also contends that the jury should not have been allowed to consider the 1998 bonus under a breach of contract theory because: (1) Advanta's retention of discretion to determine whether Riseman fulfilled the bonus conditions precluded formation of a contract; (2) Advanta's retention of discretion to decide whether or not Riseman fulfilled the bonus conditions was "absolute," and (3) Riseman did not fulfill the contractual condition requiring him to be employed with Advanta on March 31, 1999. These arguments fail.

Advanta claims that the 1998 bonus could not give rise to a contract since, by retaining discretion to evaluate fulfillment of the bonus criteria, Advanta committed itself to nothing. However, Advanta did not strike an "illusory bargain" because Riseman enjoyed a reasonable expectation that Advanta would exercise its discretion in "good faith." See U.S. v. Isaac, 141 F.3d 477, 482-84 (3d Cir. 1998) (contract could be formed even where one party reserves "sole discretion" to perform its part); Gautney v. Amerigas Propane, Inc., 107 F. Supp.2d 634, 640, 646-47 (E.D. Pa. 2000) (contract could be formed even where corporate officer has "final discretion" to determine plaintiff's eligibility for bonus under Management Incentive Plan); Kofsky v. Chemical Residential Mortg. Corp., 1999 WL 1016976 * 3 (E.D. Pa. 1999) (contract for commissions could arise, even where defendant retains discretion over commission program). Thus, a contract could have been formed with respect to the 1998 bonus.[4]

Second, Advanta's discretion to award the 1998 bonus to Riseman was not "absolute." See Goldstein v. Johnson & Johnson, 251 F.3d 433, 444-46 & n.7 (3d Cir. 2001) (even where party has "sole authority" or "final and conclusive" authority to interpret agreement, discretion must be exercised in good faith); Sterling Nat. Mortg. Co., Inc. v. Mortgage Corner, Inc., 97 F.3d 39, 44 (3d Cir. 1996) (even where party has "total discretion" or "unbounded discretion" under contract, discretion must be exercised in good faith"). Under the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, "[e]very contract imposes upon each party a duty of good faith and fair dealing in its performance and its enforcement." RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONTRACTS § 205 & Cmt. a. This implied duty may be breached where there is "interference with or failure to cooperate in the other party's performance." Somers v. Somers, 418 Pa. Super. 131, 136-39, 613 A.2d 1211, 1213-15 (1992).

Consistent with its finding that there was no "good faith" basis to withhold Riseman's wages under the WPCL, and that Advanta's violation of the ADEA was "willful," the jury was entitled to conclude that Advanta denied Riseman the 1998 bonus in violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Accordingly, Advanta is not entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this ground.

Finally, Advanta asserts that under the terms of the May 12, 1998 memorandum, Riseman was required to be employed with Advanta on March 31, 1999. Riseman did not

[4] The jury was not instructed to assume that a contract existed. Rather, the jury was provided criteria with which to evaluate whether or not one or more contracts had been formed. (12/5/00 at 60-65).

fulfill this condition, argues Advanta, because he was terminated before March 31, 1999. In spite of Advanta's paraphrase, the March 31, 1999 condition requires "being here at the time." (P-48). "it is hornbook law that if the relevant terms in a contract are ambiguous, the issue must go to a jury." Emerson Radio Corp. v. Orion Sales, Inc., 253 F.3d 159, 163 (3d Cir. 2001). With respect to the ambiguous phrase, "being here at the time," Riseman testified that he had to agree to stay with Advanta through March 31, 1999. (11/14/00 at 145-51; 11/15/00 at 133-34).[5] The jury could conclude that Riseman's agreement to stay with Advanta during a crucial transition period satisfied this contractual condition. See Chuy v. Philadelphia Eagles Football Club, 595 F.2d 1265, 1271-73 (3d Cir. 1979) (en banc).[6]

Alternatively, the jury could determine that the condition was excused. For example, the jury could decide that Advanta fired Riseman in violation of the ADEA, thereby preventing him from "being here at the time." See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONTRACTS § 225, Cmt. b; McDermott v. Party City Corp., 11 F. Supp.2d 612, 621

[5] "Being here at the time" is ambiguous because it is "capable of more than one reasonable interpretation." Pacitti v. Macy's, 193 F.3d 766, 773-75 (3d Cir. 1999) (despite language reserving "sole discretion" to offeror, contract could have conveyed a definite promise). Considering the words of the contract, the alternative meaning suggested by counsel, and the objective evidence, Riseman offered a "reasonable alternative interpretation" of the phrase. Bohler-Uddeholm America, Inc. v. Ellwood Group,. Inc., 247 F.3d 79, 93-96, 100 (3d Cir. 2001) (latent ambiguity requires "contractual hook"). For example, "being here at the time" could incorporate an implicit promise that Advanta would not prevent Riseman from "being here" in violation of federal law (ADEA).

[6] Advanta's memorandum of May 12, 1998 purported to reduce to writing an oral agreement reached two months earlier. If Advanta wanted to reserve the right not to pay the 1998 bonus through the simple expedient of terminating Riseman, it should have been more specific in the memorandum. Written contracts must be construed against the drafter, especially where the drafter is a sophisticated commercial entity. See Pacitti, 193 F.3d at 775 n.5 (citing Pennsylvania law).

(E.D. Pa. 1998) ("If a party acts to hinder the satisfaction off a condition, the condition is excused."); Cf. Apalucci v. Agora Syndicate. Inc., 145 F.3d 630, 634 (3d Cir. 1998) ("[W]hen one party to a contract unilaterally prevents the performance of a condition upon which his own liability depends, the culpable party may not then capitalize on that failure."); Anthuis v. Colt Indus. Operating Corp., 971 F.2d 999, 1008 n.8 (3d Cir. 1992) (quoting 5 WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 677, at 224 (3d ed. 1961)) ("It is a principle of fundamental justice that if a promisor is himself the cause of the failure of performance ... of a condition upon which his own liability depends, he cannot take advantage of the failure.").

Accordingly, judgment as a matter of law is not appropriate with respect to the 1998 bonus.

(3) Breach of Contract: 1997 Bonus

Advanta contends that Riseman could not recover the 1997 bonus because Advanta Mortgage did not experience a "change of control," and the mere fact that Advanta awarded the bonus to employees whose business units did not experience a change of control does not entitle Riseman to a bonus as well. Judgment as a matter of law is not warranted.

The April 28, 1997 letter provided for a bonus of 200% of Riseman's salary if there were a "change of control affecting your group." (P-46). It is undisputed that the sale of Advanta's consumer credit card division to Fleet constituted a "change of control." In addition, there was ample evidence for the jury to conclude that this change of control affected Riseman's group, Advanta Mortgage.

In 1998, after Advanta sold its consumer credit card division to Fleet, Advanta Mortgage became the most important and profitable business unit at Advanta, representing 85% of the revenues, assets and profits of the entire corporation. (P-8; P-251; 11 /20/00 at 87-88; 11/21/00 at 47-65). As the mortgage group assumed greater prominence within the company, Riseman's business and personal performance came under closer scrutiny from the Office of the Chair. (11/14/00 at 126, 145-47; 11/27/00 at 103; 11/29/00 at 129). The jury could conclude that such enhanced expectations from Advanta Mortgage and Riseman, precipitated by the sale of Advanta's consumer credit card division, was a change of control "affecting" Riseman's group; (11/14/00 at 132; 11/17/00 at 120, 138-66).[7] Judgment as a matter of law will not be granted.

(4) Detrimental Reliance

Finally, Advanta argues that a detrimental reliance claim should not have been submitted to the jury because Riseman did not refrain from seeking other employment. This contention fails because there was evidence to support detrimental reliance on other grounds. For instance, the jury could have found that Riseman worked harder, increased his flexibility and cooperation with management, or otherwise was induced into action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character in reliance on a bonus promise. See JMJ Enterprises, Inc. v. Via Veneto Italian Ice, Inc., 1998 WL 175888 * 3 (E.D. Pa. 1998), aff'd, 178 F.3d 1279 (3d Cir. 1999) (table); Robert Mallery Lumber Corp. v. B & F Assocs., Inc., 294 Pa. Super. 503, 511-12, 440 A.2d 579, 582-83 (1982).[8] Accordingly, judgment as a matter of law is inappropriate.

Advanta has not demonstrated that the record is "critically deficient of that minimum quantum of evidence

[7] The fact that Advanta reserved "sole discretion" to determine whether the change of control affected Riseman's group is not dispositive. As with the 1998 bonus, the jury could have found that Advanta failed to exercise its discretion in good faith. See, e.g., Germantown Mfg. Co. v. Rawlinson, 341 Pa. Super. 42, 60-61, 491 A.2d 138, 148 (1985).

[8] Advanta's fallback position that Riseman could not have "reasonably relied" on a discretionary promise also misses the mark. Riseman could have reasonably relied on Advanta's implicit promise to exercise its discretion in good faith.

from which a jury might reasonably afford relief." Starceski v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 54 F.3d 1089, 1095 (3d Cir. 1995); Williamson v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 926 F.2d 1344, 1348 (3d Cir. 1991). Therefore, I will deny the renewed motion for judgment as a matter of law.

B. ADVANTA'S MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59, Advanta moves for a new trial on Riseman's claims of retaliation under the ADEA, breach of contract, detrimental reliance, and violation of the WPCL. Advanta argues that the damages verdict is against the weight of the evidence, and thus a new trial on damages and liability is warranted. This motion will be denied.

A motion for new trial based upon the weight of the evidence is entitled to great scrutiny because it invites the court to substitute its judgment for that of the jury. See Wilburn v. Maritrans Gp. Inc., 139 F.3d 350, 363-64 (3d Cir. 1998); Delli Santi v. CNA Ins. Co., 88 F.3d 192, 201 (3d Cir. 1996). Such a motion may be granted only if the court, in its discretion, finds that the jury's verdict represents a "miscarriage of justice," or cries out to be overturned because it "shocks the conscience." Williamson v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 926 F.2d 1344, 1352-53 (3d Cir. 1991); Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., Inc., 980 F.2d 171, 211 (3d Cir. 1992).

A motion for new trial is imbued with constitutional dimensions. See Atlantic & Gulf Stevedores, Inc. v. Ellerman Lines, Ltd., 369 U.S. 355 (1962) (Seventh Amendment requires jury to resolve disputed fact questions). If the verdict winner sets forth even a "minimally plausible" or "conceivable" way of reconciling the jury's answers, the court is "constitutionally bound" to deny the motion. McAdam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 896 F.2d 750, 764-66 (3d Cir. 1990) (emphasis in original). Because new trials "effect[] a denigration of the jury system" and "usurp[] the prime function of the jury as the trier of the facts," Lind v.

Schenley Indus., Inc., 278 F.2d 79, 88-91 (3d Cir. 1960) (en banc), the constitutional guarantees of the Seventh Amendment have "particular force" when a losing party attacks the weight of the evidence. See Williamson, 926 F.2d at 1348.

Advanta's motion for a new trial does not satisfy these procedural and constitutional standards.

(1) Damages

First, Advanta attacks the jury's damage award as "impossible." A damages verdict will be affirmed if "'there is any view of the case which reconciles the [jury's] various answers.'" McAdam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 896 F.2d 750, 763 (3d Cir. 1990) (emphasis in original) (quoting Bradford-White Corp. v. Ernst & Whinney, 872 F.2d 1153, 1159 (3d Cir. 1989)). In reviewing the jury's verdict, I may not speculate as to what the jurors were "really" trying to do, or weigh the reasonableness of Riseman's view of the evidence against Advanta's view. See id. at 763-65. If Riseman's view is conceivable, the jury's verdict may not be disturbed.[9]

The jury awarded $3,939,126 in total damages, including $1,377,125 in back pay and $2,562,001 under the WPCL. The jury's award is consistent with the evidence and certainly does not "shock the conscience." First, the total award of $3,939,126 is reasonably close to what the damages expert suggested was appropriate under conservative

[9] Cf. Atlantic & Gulf Stevedores, Inc. v. Ellerman Lines, Ltd., 369 U.S. 355, 364 (1962) ("Where there is a view of the case that makes the jury's answers to special interrogatories consistent, they must be resolved that way."); McAdam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 896 F.2d 750, 764 (3d Cir. 1990) (court is "under a constitutional mandate to search for a view of the case that makes the jury's answers consistent"); Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 626 F.2d 280, 293 (3d Cir. 1980) ("[if] there is at least one way to explain the jury's answers to the interrogatories, [court is] bound to affirm them").

assumptions. (12/1/00 at 89-95). Advanta presented no contrary damages expert.

Second, the $1,377,125 "back pay" award could have been computed under several scenarios. One possible method, suggested by Riseman, is the difference between the salary and AMIP bonus amounts Riseman could have earned at Advanta between October 1998 and December 2000, and the amounts he actually earned during this time. In 1998, Riseman received a 20% merit raise, from $325,000 to $385,000 in salary. (P-61G; 11/14/00 at 140). Considering the trend in Riseman's salary since 1992, as well as the mortgage unit's pivotal status after 1998, the jury could have projected similar increases for 1999 and 2000. With such raises, Riseman could earn a 1999 AMIP bonus of $462,000, a 2000 AMIP bonus of $554,400, and $360,725 more in Advanta base salary than he actually earned between October 1998 and December 2000. Alternatively, the jury could have awarded lower AMIP bonuses in 1999 and 2000, and found a higher salary differential between October 1998 and December 2000. In either case, $1,377,125 in "back pay" is justifiable.[10]

Finally, the WPCL award of $2,562,001 could include $650,000 from the 1997 bonus, $400,000 from the 1998 bonus, plus an unliquidated amount from the 1998 AMIP bonus.[11] Advanta's post-trial position is that Riseman's AMIP bonus for 1998 was capped at double his "target" bonus. However, Advanta points to no evidence establishing

[10] This "back pay" hypothetical does not even include the 1997 bonus, the 1998 bonus, or the 1998 AMIP bonus. For instance, a bonus may have been denied before Riseman engaged in protected activity or, perhaps, denied in bad faith but not in retaliation for an age-discrimination complaint.

[11] Because the verdict is most reasonably read without any overlapping "back pay" or WPCL components, an award of liquidated damages under ADEA and WPCL would not constitute "double recovery."

a conclusive cap on Riseman's AMIP bonus for that year. Also, while insisting that the jury should receive instructions on the parameters of the 1997 and 1998 bonuses, Advanta did not seek an instruction regarding any damages ceiling on the AMIP bonus. In fact, on December 5, 2000, when the jury asked where it could find Riseman's 1998 AMIP bonus in the evidence, Advanta agreed there was no document defining Riseman's 1998 AMIP bonus, and the jury was so instructed. (12/5/00 at 78-80). Thus, the jury conscientiously considered how much to award for Riseman's 1998 AMIP bonus, and reasonably could have believed there was no per se limit on the amount.[12]

The jury could award a 1998 AMIP bonus of $1,512,001, based upon Riseman's role at Advanta Mortgage and the company's overall performance. There was extensive evidence of how Riseman personally saved, turned around, and built the mortgage unit. (P-51-54; P-116; 11/14/00 at 105-125; 11/17/00 at 64-65; 11/20/00 at 61-63; 11/21/00 at 47-65). The jury learned that, under Riseman's leadership, Advanta Mortgage became the most important and profitable business unit at Advanta. By 1998, Advanta Mortgage alone constituted 85% of the revenues, assets and profits of the entire Advanta Corporation. (P-8; P-251; 11/20/00 at 87-88; 11/21/00 at 47-65). Based upon Advanta's financial performance in 1998, including the undeniable contribution of Riseman and Advanta Mortgage, the jury could have decided that a $1.5 million bonus was appropriate. Under the circumstances of this case, the jury's bonus award certainly does not "shock the conscience." See Paolella v. Browning-Ferris, Inc., 158 F.3d 183, 189, 19495 (3d Cir. 1998) (upholding front pay award that was "more than 17 times" the amount defendant claimed was supported by the evidence).[13]

The law does not command mathematical precision in ascertaining damages from the evidence. See Scully v. US Wats. Inc., 238 F.3d 497, 515 (3d Cir. 2001). When a jury restores a victim to the economic position he would otherwise have occupied, any imprecision in damages must be borne by the wrongdoer. See Goss v. Exxon Office Systems Co., 747 F.2d 885, 889 (3d Cir. 1984) ("The risk of lack of certainty with respect to projections of lost income must be borne by the wrongdoer, not the victim."); Young v. Lukens Steel Co., 881 F. Supp. 962, 976 (E.D. Pa. 1994) ("'any ambiguity in what the claimant would have received but for the (retaliation] should be resolved against the [retaliating] employer'") (citations omitted).

Moreover, "it is well accepted that a court will not inquire into the calculation methods employed by the jury during its deliberations." Chuy v. Philadelphia Eagles Football Club, 595 F.2d 1265, 1279 n.19 (3d Cir. 1979) (en banc). Instead, a court "must assume" that the jury acted rationally, "'followed the court's instructions and arrived at a verdict based on those instructions.'" Loughman v. Consol-Pennsylvania Coal Co., 6 F.3d 88, 102, 105 (3d Cir. 1993) (citations omitted).

Because the verdict does not represent an "impossible" application of the evidence to the instructions, a new trial will not be granted on this basis.

[13] With respect to Advanta's key corporate executives, the jury was told of numerous instances in which Riseman's colleagues received sizable bonuses. For example, in 1998, executives Dennis Alter and William Rosoff each received $5 million bonuses, in addition to other bonuses plus base compensation. (11/17/00 at 141-42; 12/1/00 at 61-65; P-281 at 8-9). Apart from other compensation, Elizabeth Mai received a $1.5 million bonus. (11/17/00 at 139; 11/28/00 at 9; 11/29/00 at 226-27).

(2) Severance

Advanta also seeks a new trial because it believes that the jury may have awarded severance damages. This speculation does not warrant a new trial.

At summary judgment, the Court reserved the issue of severance damages for an ERISA bench trial, but did not state that severance was irrelevant to ADEA liability. Riseman subsequently introduced evidence of disparate severance pay as part of his ADEA case, without asking for severance in his damage calculations or closing argument. (12/4/00 at 191-92). Thus, the jury charge referred to severance as part of Riseman's liability claims, but not as an element of damages. (12/5/00 at 9-11, 54-60). For apparent strategic reasons, Advanta even declined the Court's invitation to instruct the jury not to award severance. (12/5/00 at 13-14). Accordingly, Advanta may not seek a new trial on this ground.

Advanta also argues that none of its former employees who received severance were "similarly situated" to Riseman. At trial, Riseman presented evidence that an executive discharged for theft, dishonesty and breach of trust (after only five months of work) had received substantial severance pay, whereas Riseman (who had been with Advanta for over five years) received no severance pay. (11/17/00 at 169-177). Whether such former Advanta employees were "similarly situated" to Riseman was a jury question. The admission of this evidence does not compel a new trial.

(3) ADEA "Back Pay"

Advanta next contends that the 1997 bonus and 1998 bonus cannot be included in "back pay." I need not address this argument because the jury did not necessarily include either bonus in its "back pay" award. See, e.g., Part II(B)(1), supra.

(4) ADEA "Front Pay"

Advanta moves for a new trial with regard to ADEA "front pay," claiming: (1) Riseman waived his right to seek front pay through a comment at the pre-trial conference, (2) front pay is an equitable remedy that cannot be awarded by a jury, and (3) Riseman was not eligible for front pay because he had reestablished himself in the workforce. These arguments do not entitle Advanta to a new trial.[14]

(1) Waiver

First, Advanta contends that Riseman waived his right to seek front pay when one of his attorneys stated at the final pretrial conference that Riseman was not seeking reinstatement. In Wehr v. Burroughs Corp., 619 F.2d 276, 283-84 & n.18 (3d Cir. 1980), the plaintiff waived front pay where his attorney specifically disclaimed reinstatement in a letter to the court.[15] However, in Maxfield v. Sinclair Int'l, 766 F.2d 788, 795-97 (3d Cir. 1985), the Third Circuit distinguished Wehr, holding that the issue of front pay was preserved when plaintiff requested future damages in his complaint. Understandably, in this case, Riseman requested front pay rather than reinstatement.[16] Absent an unequivocal

[14] Because there is a possibility that the jury awarded "front pay," I will address Advanta's arguments.

[15] In Wehr, the Third Circuit did not hold that it would have been error for the district court to consider front pay, but only that the district court did not abuse its discretion in finding waiver. See id. at 284 n. 19.

[16] Reinstatement may not be feasible if there is "continuing hostility" and "animosity" between the parties or, alternatively, no position is available at the time of judgment. See Pollard v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 121 S.Ct. 1946, 1948 (2001); Starceski, 54 F.3d at 1103; Maxfield, 766 F.2d at 796. It was abundantly evident during this litigation (and in repeated settlement attempts) that there was irreparable animosity between the parties. Moreover, Advanta argued at trial that there would likely not be a position for Riseman because Advanta was contemplating the sale of its mortgage company. Reinstatement was not feasible in this case, and no party has ever argued otherwise.

disclaimer such as the letter sent to the court in Wehr, Riseman did not waive his right to seek front pay.

(ii) Awarded by the Jury

Advanta goes on to assert that front pay is an equitable remedy which cannot be awarded by the jury. This argument is foreclosed by controlling Third Circuit precedent.

It is for the court to decide whether reinstatement is feasible and, if not, whether front pay should be awarded in lieu of reinstatement. See Starceski v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 54 F.3d 1089, 1103 (3d Cir. 1995); Blum v. Witco Chemical Corp., 829 F.2d 367, 374 (3d Cir. 1937). However, once the court decides that reinstatement is not feasible, the amount of damages to be awarded as front pay becomes a jury question. See Blum, 829 F.2d at 374 n.4; Maxfield, 766 F.2d at 796.

(iii) Eligibility for Front Pay

Finally, Advanta claims that Riseman was not eligible for front pay as a matter of law. A monetary substitute for the equitable remedy of reinstatement, front pay is designed to restore the victim of an employer's unlawful conduct to the position he would have otherwise occupied. See Pollard v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 121 S.Ct. 1946, 1950 (2001); Maxfield, 766 F.2d at 795-96. Advanta argues that Riseman was not eligible for this "make-whole" remedy because he reestablished his rightful place in the workforce. See Goss v. Exxon Office Systems Co., 747 F.2d 885, 889-90 (3d Cir. 1984) (in business sales context where plaintiff reestablished herself, district court did not abuse discretion in limiting front pay award to four months). But whether Riseman had reestablished his rightful place in the workforce (and, if so, when) was a jury question. To the extent that the jury awarded front pay, it resolved this issue against Advanta.

Advanta also challenges Riseman's request that he be awarded front pay to age 70 or 75. See Anastasio v. Schering Corp., 838 F.2d 701, 709-10 (3d Cir. 1988) (where jury findings were consistent with decision that plaintiff would have retired before age 70, ADEA did not "guarantee ... an annuity to age 70"). Given that Riseman was 64 years of age at the time of trial, a front pay award up to age 70 or 75 would not be inappropriate as a matter of law. See Feldman v. Philadelphia Housing Auth., 43 F.3d 823, 832-33, 841 (3d Cir. 1995) (upholding 38 year-old's front pay award to retirement age of 65); Blum, 829 F.2d at 375-76 (failure to award front pay to 63 year-old until normal retirement age could constitute abuse of discretion).[17]

For these reasons, the submission of Riseman's front pay claim to the jury does not merit a new trial.

(5) Breach of Contract

Advanta seeks a new trial on Riseman's breach of contract claims for substantially the reasons argued in its motion for judgment as a matter of law. To the extent Advanta relies upon its discretion to deny the 1997 and 1998 bonuses, the retention of discretion did not give Advanta license to act in bad faith. In view of the substantial evidence that Advanta had been satisfied with Riseman's performance from 1992 to 1997, the jury could have concluded that Advanta's purported dissatisfaction with Riseman in 1998 was not genuine. There was also sufficient evidence for the jury to decide that all contractual conditions were satisfied or excused.

Advanta's only other basis for seeking a new trial on breach of contract is that the jury charge did not enumerate the specific conditions applicable to each of the contracts. Where an objection to a jury charge has been preserved, the court must ask whether the charge, "'taken as a whole, properly apprises the jury of the issues and the applicable law.'" Watson v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Auth., 207 F.3d 207, 212 (3d Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 121 S.Ct. 1086 (2001); Smith v. Borough of Wilkinsburg, 147 F.3d 272, 275 (3d Cir. 1998); Limbach Co. v. Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n, AFL-CIO, 949 F.2d 1241, 1259 n.15 (3d Cir. 1991) (en banc).

[17] Whether or not Riseman testified about a specific intention to retire on a particular date, there was sufficient evidence for the jury to calculate a reasonable front pay award. See Gorniak v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., 889 F.2d 481, 486-87 (3d Cir. 1989).

The Court's charge met that standard. The jury instructions avoided reciting either parties' characterizations of the facts, but informed the jury of the issues and applicable law. Advanta had every opportunity to explain the contractual conditions, as it viewed them, to the jury. A new trial on breach of contract is not required.

(6) WPCL

With respect to the WPCL, Advanta moves for a new trial on three grounds: (1) Riseman's bonuses were not "earned" within the meaning of the WPCL, (2) the jury was not given a specific instruction on the definition of "good faith," and (3) the jury was not instructed that Riseman had the burden to prove lack of good faith by "clear and convincing" evidence. None of these assertions compel a new trial.

(i) Riseman's Bonuses Were "Earned"

Advanta argues that Riseman's 1998 bonus and 1998 AMIP bonus were not "earned" within the meaning of the WPCL. Under the WPCL, "[w]henever an employer separates an employe from the payroll, or whenever an employe quits or resigns his employment, the wages or compensation earned shall become due and payable not later than the next regular payday of his employer on which such wages would otherwise be due and payable." 43 P.S. § 260.5(a). The WPCL does not create a substantive right to compensation, but rather a statutory remedy for an employer's breach of contractual obligation to pay wages. See Weldon v. Kraft, Inc., 896 F.2d 793, 801 (3d Cir. 1990); Kafando v. Eric Ceramic Arts Co., 764 A.2d 59, 61 (Pa. Super. 2000).

The term "wages" includes "fringe benefits or wage supplements" which, in turn, includes any amount to be paid pursuant to an agreement between the employer and the employee. See 43 P.S. § 260.2a. To the extent Riseman's bonuses were to be paid pursuant to an agreement with Advanta, they were statutory "wages" (as well as "fringe benefits or wage supplements") under the WPCL. Although several courts have determined that "wages" must be "earned" to be recoverable under section 260.5(a), at least one district court in this Circuit has held that "fringe benefits or wage supplements" need not be "earned." See Bowers v. NETI Technologies, Inc., 690 F. Supp. 349, 353 n.5 (E.D. Pa. 1988) ("earned" requirement significantly absent from 43 P.S. § 260.3(b)).[18] Under this WPCL interpretation, Riseman need not have "earned" any bonuses that fit the definition of "fringe benefits or wage supplements."

However, assuming that Riseman's bonuses had to be "earned," the jury could have decided that Riseman earned his bonuses. "The contract between the parties governs in determining whether specific wages are earned." Weldon, 896 F.2d at 801; Gautney v. Amerigas Propane, Inc., 107 F. Supp.2d 634, 646 (E.D. Pa. 2000). The jury could conclude that when Advanta unlawfully terminated Riseman under the ADEA and breached its bonus agreements, Riseman had a vested contractual entitlement to bonuses for work already performed—not merely a contractual expectation to earn wages in the future. See Regier v. Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc. 1995 WL 395948 * 8 (E.D. Pa. 1995), aff'd, 92 F.3d 1172 (3d Cir. 1996) (table) (assuming that "fringe benefits or wage supplements" must be earned, they are "earned" when plaintiff renders sufficient services for contractual rights to vest); see also Kofsky v. Chemical Residential Mortg. Corp., 1999 WL 1016976 * 4-5 (E.D. Pa. 1999) (viability of contract claim for commissions precluded summary judgment on WPCL claim).[19]

[18] In two of its most recent cases interpreting the WPCL, the Pennsylvania Superior Court recognized Bowers specifically. See Kafando v. Erie Ceramic Arts Co., 764 A.2d 59, 63 (Pa. Super. 2000); Hartman v. Baker, 766 A.2d 347, 353 (Pa. Super. 2000), appeal denied 764 A.2d 1070 (2000).

This conclusion is reinforced by several factors. First, the civil provisions of the WPCL must be liberally construed to effectuate their remedial purpose and "promote justice." See 1 Pa. C.S.A. § 1928(c); Regier, 1995 WL 395948 * 6; Bowers 690 F. Supp. at 354. The underlying purpose of the WPCL is to remove some of the obstacles employees face in litigation, by providing them with a statutory remedy to recover contractual wages from an employer. See Barnhart v. Compugraphic Corp., 936 F.2d 131, 133-34 (3d Cir. 1991); Oberneder v. Link Computer Corp., 548 Pa. 201, 206, 696 A.2d 148, 151 (1997); Hartman v. Baker, 766 A.2d 347. 352-53 (Pa. Super. 2000), appeal denied, 764 A.2d 1070 (2000). At the same time, the mere fact that Riseman was no longer employed by Advanta after October 1998 is not controlling. See Scully v. US Wats, Inc., 238 F.3d 497, 517-18 (3d Cir. 2001) (where defendant discharged plaintiff and prevented him from exercising stock options while on the payroll, ex-employee had "earned" stock options within the meaning of the WPCL).

Under the constellation of facts and findings in this case, the jury could have concluded that Riseman "earned" the 1997 bonus, the 1998 bonus and the 1998 AMIP bonus within the meaning of the WPCL.

[19] In this case, Riseman did not seek to recover salary and commissions that would have been earned after his separation from Advanta, but rather to recover bonuses for work that was already substantially performed when Advanta breached its part of the bargain. Compare Sendi v. NCR Comten, Inc., 619 F. Supp. 1577 (E.D. Pa. 1985), aff'd, 800 F.2d 1138 (3d Cir. 1986) (table) (since WPCL does not govern wages agreed to be paid in the future for services to be rendered in the future, plaintiff could not recover commissions on sales that would have been consummated after his termination date).

(ii) Definition of "Good Faith"

Advanta alternatively challenges the Court's award of liquidated damages pursuant to the jury's finding that Advanta did not withhold wages in "good faith." Where wages remain unpaid for thirty days beyond the regularly scheduled payday, an employee can recover liquidated damages equal to 25% of the wages due, unless there is a "good faith contest or dispute" about the wage claim. See 43 P.S. § 260.10. The jury found that Advanta had no "good faith" basis to withhold Riseman's wages under the WPCL. Advanta now argues that the jury was without proper guidance on the meaning of "good faith."

In the first place, Advanta did not submit a proposed jury instruction concerning the "good faith" issue. Advanta did not address the "good faith" issue at all until shortly before the jury was to receive its instructions, after the charging conferences and review of the charge itself had been completed. (12/4/00 at 136-45; 12/5/00 at 37). Moreover, Advanta's argument lacks merit. The WPCL does not provide a statutory definition of "good faith." See 43 P.S. § 260.2a.[20] Because juries are sufficiently equipped to understand and apply this term, the verdict does not represent a "miscarriage of justice."

(iii) "Clear and Convincing" Evidence

Finally, Advanta claims that the Court should have instructed the jury that Riseman was required to prove lack of good faith by "clear and convincing" evidence. For this [20] As neither the WPCL nor decisional law have defined "good faith," the Pennsylvania Superior Court recently consulted Black's Law Dictionary. See Hartman v. Baker, 766 A.2d 347, 354 n.3 (Pa. Super. 2000), appeal denied, 764 A.2d 1070 (2000) Black's definition of "good faith" does not deviate from an ordinary understanding of the term. See, e.g., WEBSTER'S NINTH NEW COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY 527 (9th ed. 1984). In addition, Black's definition references the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, about which the jury was instructed. See BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 701 (7th ed. 1999).

proposition, Advanta cites Hartman v. Baker, 766 A.2d 347 (Pa. Super. 2000), appeal denied, 764 A.2d 1070 (2000). However, Hartman did not place the burden of proof on the employee to prove bad faith. Instead. Hartman, assumed that the employer bore the burden to prove good faith by clear and convincing evidence. See id. at 353-54. Advanta could not have been prejudiced by the absence of an instruction requiring it to prove good faith by clear and convincing evidence.

Accordingly, none of Advanta's claims concerning the WPCL earn it a new trial.

(7) Admissions

Advanta argues next that the Court should have prevented Riseman from impeaching its witnesses with "admissions" contained in Advanta's pleadings and in a reply brief. Advanta says its lawyers' statements that Riseman had been "terminated" and "fired" were not judicial admissions. A new trial is not mandated on this basis because no legal error occurred, and it is "highly probable" that the ruling did not "affect the outcome of the case." McOueeney v. Wilmington Trust Co., 779 F.2d 916, 917 (3d Cir. 1985).

"'A party's assertion of fact in a pleading is a judicial admission by which it normally is bound throughout the course of the proceeding.'" Schott Motorcycle Supply, Inc. v. American Honda Motor Co., Inc., 976 F.2d 58, 61 (1st Cir. 1992) (citing Second, Fifth, Sixth, and Eighth Circuits). While emphasizing that Advanta did not sign its attorneys' Answer to the Complaint and Amended Complaint, Advanta concedes that its Answer is a pleading. The pleading that Riseman was "terminated" can reasonably be construed as an assertion of fact. See id. at 61 (statement that "contract" existed between the parties construed as "factual" assertion).[21]

[21] In the context of this case, a statement that Riseman was "terminated," or even "fired," is not a legal conclusion. The jury received

Furthermore, it does not appear that Advanta was pleading a defense "alternately or hypothetically" under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(e)(2). See Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, 5 FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 1282 at 525 (West, 2d ed. 1990) (alternative pleading drafted in terms of "either-or," and hypothetical pleading formulated as "if-then"). Thus, the admission of Advanta's statements is not in tension with Rule 8(e)(2). See Giannone v. U.S. Steel Corp., 238 F.2d 544, 547-48 (3d Cir. 1956) (noting possible tension between admission of pleadings and Rule 8(e)(2), but declining to resolve the issue).[22]

Accordingly, the factual statements contained in Advanta's pleadings and reply brief were admissible for impeachment purposes. See Giannone, 238 F.2d at 547 (even withdrawn or superseded pleadings are admissible); Johnson v. Goldstein, 864 F. Supp. 490, 492-93 (E.D. Pa. 1994), aff d, 66 F.3d 311 (3d Cir. 1995) (table); Gerlach v, Volvo Cars of instructions about Advanta's right to fire Riseman, and no wrongful discharge claim was presented at trial. (12/5/00 at 56). The ultimate legal issue was whether Riseman experienced "discrimination" or "retaliation." Compare Giannone v. U.S. Steel Corp., 238 F.2d 544, 548 (3d Cir. 1956) (affirming exclusion of select language from third-party complaint that charged third-party defendant with "negligence," where third-party plaintiff/defendant did not itself admit any "negligence").

[22] The parallel statement in Advanta's reply brief was cumulative and otherwise independently admissible. See, e.g., Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2); American Title Ins. Co. v. Lacelaw Corp., 861 F.2d 224, 226-27 (9th Cir. 1988); U.S. v. Kattar, 840 F.2d 118, 130-31 (1st Cir. 1988). It would be anomalous to admit statements of corporate employees as substantive evidence, but not to admit statements by the company's attorney, during the instant litigation, for impeachment. See Zipf v. American Tel. & Tel. Co., 799 F.2d 889, 894-95 & n.8 (3d Cir. 1986), U.S. v. Johnson, 752 F.2d 206, 210-11 (6th Cir. 1985). Moreover, through further examination and argument, Advanta had every opportunity to place the alleged "admissions" in context. Cf. Derby & Co., Inc. v. Seaview Petroleum Co., 756 F. Supp. 868, 877 (E.D. Pa. 1991) (inconsistent statement made in other litigation should be weighed along with all other evidence).

North America, 1997 WL 129004 * 4 n.2 (E.D. Pa. 1997) (citing Second and Third Circuits); U.S. v. Owens Contracting Services, Inc., 884 F. Supp. 1095, 1108 (E.D. Mich. 1994) (citing Sixth and Ninth Circuits).

In any event, it is highly probable that the outcome of the case did not depend upon this evidence. While the jurors asked for an exhibit number because they were "unable to find letter from Mr. Goldich stating Mr. Riseman was 'fired,'" the Court informed the jury that no such letter existed. (Docket Entry # 161, Question 2). With this response, the jury returned to its deliberations and did not inquire about the matter further. (12/5/00 at 74-80). Moreover, Advanta was not judicially estopped from arguing that Riseman had "resigned," and any statement that Riseman had been "terminated" or "fired" was not deemed conclusive. Compare Travelers Indem. Co. v. Engel, 1994 WL 398788 * 3-4 (E.D. Pa. 1994) (admission in defendant's Answer deemed conclusive, even though post-pleading affidavit contradicted admission).

Because the challenged evidentiary rulings were correct, and it is highly probable that they did not affect the outcome in any event, a new trial is not warranted.

(8) Deposition Transcripts

Finally, Advanta complains that it was not allowed to read excerpts from certain deposition transcripts showing that Riseman had explored potential employment with Providian Financial Corporation. Advanta claims that if the jury had heard these excerpts, it might have found against Riseman on detrimental reliance. However, besides foregoing employment, Riseman could have worked harder at Advanta, increased his flexibility and cooperation with management, or otherwise incurred substantial detriment in reliance on a bonus promise. Given the slight probative value of the deposition excerpts and the late hour at which Advanta proposed to read them to the jury, it was a permissible exercise of discretion to exclude this evidence.

None of Advanta's grounds for a new trial meet the procedural and constitutional standards governing this motion. Because I do not find that the jury's verdict represents a "miscarriage of justice," or "shocks the conscience," the motion for a new trial will be denied. Delli Santi v. CNA Ins. Co., 88 F.3d 192, 201-02 (3d Cir. 1996); Olefins Trading. Inc. v. Han Yang Chem Corp., 9 F.3d 282, 289-90 (3d Cir. 1993); Williamson v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 926 F.2d 1344, 1352-54 (3d Cir. 1991); McAdam v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 896 F.2d 750, 763-66 (3d Cir. 1990); Lind v. Schenley Indus., Inc., 278 F.2d 79, 88-91 (3d Cir. 1960).[23]

C. RISEMAN'S MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL

Riseman moves for a new trial on his age-discrimination claim against Advanta, his detrimental reliance claim against the individual defendants, and his fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims against all defendants. This motion will be denied.

The sole basis for Riseman's motion with respect to age discrimination is that he was unable to obtain certain information during discovery. However, Riseman can point to no error in the Court's discovery rulings that would warrant a new trial on age discrimination. See Hewlett v. Davis, 844 F.2d 109, 113-14 (3d Cir. 1988); In re Fine Paper Antitrust Litig., 685 F.2d 810, 817-18 (3d Cir. 1982).[24]

[23] Advanta's catch-all argument that the verdict is the product of jury passion and prejudice against a large corporation is without merit. The Court specifically instructed the jury: "All persons, including individuals and corporations, stand equal before the law. Sympathy for any party or prejudice against any party should play no part in your deliberations or in your decision." (12/5/00 at 44). Thus, the jury charge stated, and subsequently reiterated, the need for fair and dispassionate consideration of all evidence. (12/5/00 at 59, 72). Moreover, the jury's finding on age discrimination undercuts Advanta's claim of widespread bias and confusion.

[24] "In the event of a new trial," Riseman suggests that the jury should be instructed according to the burdens applicable in a "mixed

Riseman also moves for a new trial on his detrimental reliance claim against the individual defendants. A detrimental reliance claim was submitted to the jury against the corporate defendants, but not the individual defendants, because Riseman's claim sounded in contract. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONTRACTS § 90(1) & Cmt. d. (12/4/00 at 3, 8-9). As determined at summary judgment, the individual defendants could not be held liable for Advanta's contractual damages. See, e.g., American Guarantee and Liability Ins. Co. v. Fojanini, 90 F. Supp.2d 615, 623 n.14 (E.D. Pa. 2000) (corporate officers liable for corporate contracts if they are signatories in an individual capacity, or can be reached under veil-piercing or participation theories); Harris v. Madison, 1998 WL 518181 * 2 (E.D. Pa. 1998); B & L Asphalt Indus., Inc. v. Fusco, 753 A.2d 264, 270 (Pa. Super. 2000). Riseman's argument that detrimental reliance is an "equitable remedy" does not suffice to make the individual defendants liable for contractual damages of the corporation.

Finally, Riseman moves for a new trial on his fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims. To recover for fraud or negligent misrepresentation, Riseman was required to demonstrate that he justifiably relied upon a false statement or promise, and that he suffered damages as a proximate result of this reliance. See Gibbs v. Ernst, 538 Pa. 193, 207-10, 647 A.2d 882, 889-90 (1994); Delahanty v. First Penn. Bank. N.A., 318 Pa. Super. 90, 108,464 A.2d 1243, 1252 (1983). Riseman argues that he refrained from looking for another job because of Advanta's bonus promises, and thus motives" case, as opposed to a "pretext" case. Compare Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989), with McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973). However, Riseman has not moved for a new trial on this basis (nor would such a motion succeed, see, e.g., 12/1/00 at 170-75), and I need not decide whether a "mixed motives" instruction would be appropriate in the context of a new trial. See generally Walden v. Georgia-Pacific Corp., 126 F.3d 506, 512-16 (3d Cir. 1997).

suitable alternative employment was not available for eight months after he was terminated.

However, Riseman failed to produce any evidence of a job that would have been offered to him, and which he would have accepted, in or around October 1998. Indeed, after resting his case, Riseman could point to no evidence of alternative employment that he could and would have obtained. (12/4/00 at 4-7). Nor was there evidence that Advanta's bonus promises proximately caused an eight month period of unemployment. The jury should not have been invited to guess whether some unidentified position existed that Riseman could have accepted in October 1998, and to surmise that Advanta's bonus offers caused Riseman's subsequent unemployment. See Yerger v. Landis Mfg. Systems, Inc., 1989 WL 66443 * 6 (E.D. Pa. 1989), aff'd, 924 F.2d 1050 (3d Cir. 1990) (table) ("jury cannot be allowed to speculate on whether there were available to plaintiff other suitable employment opportunities, whether he would have obtained some unidentified position, and if so, how much he would have been paid").

Wholly apart from the issues of justifiable reliance and proximate causation, Riseman did not introduce evidence of the difference between the amounts he earned at Advanta and what he would have earned at a position commencing in or around October 1998. Since Riseman earned more at Advanta than he has earned elsewhere, the mere fact that Riseman remained with Advanta for an additional period of time cannot constitute financial injury. See Surovcik v. D & K Optical, Inc., 702 F. Supp. 1171, 1177-78 (M.D. Pa. 1988) (delay of employment search lacked sufficient nexus to alleged misrepresentation and did not establish actual pecuniary loss); Engstrom v. John Nuveen & Co., Inc., 668 F. Supp. 953, 963 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (remaining with employer who promised excellent salaries, bonuses and promotions, without evidence that plaintiff refused offers of comparable work, cannot constitute financial detriment).

Given the wealth of evidence presented to the jury, there can be no basis for a new trial on Riseman's age-discrimination claim. Moreover, judgment as a matter of law was properly granted with respect to Riseman's detrimental reliance claim against the individual defendants, and fraud and negligent misrepresentation claims. Riseman was fully heard on the issues, and there was no legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to have found in his favor. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(a)(l); Northview Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 227 F.3d 78, 88 (3d Cir. 2000); Marinelli v. City of Erie, 216 F.3d 354, 359 (3d Cir. 2000). Accordingly, Riseman's motion for a new trial will be denied.
